The company has denied allegations that it deliberately misled its customers. A spokesperson claimed that the organisation had always acted responsibly and maintained that all information provided to customers had been accurate.

Several former employees, however, alleged that managers had encouraged staff to hide certain details. One employee admitted having received instructions to change some documents, although the company denied having given such orders.

An independent investigation is expected to examine the claims. The investigators are believed to have already interviewed several employees. They have urged the company to cooperate fully and cautioned managers against attempting to influence witnesses.

The company has promised to cooperate with the investigation and has acknowledged that some mistakes may have been made. It has also insisted that there was no deliberate attempt to deceive customers.
