CZĘŚĆ I — READING

The company announced that it would launch an internal investigation after several employees raised concerns about working conditions. The director said that the company took the allegations seriously and promised to publish the results of the investigation.

Several employees claimed that managers had ignored complaints for months. One employee admitted having reported the problem several times, while another denied having received a response.

The director denied that the company had deliberately ignored the complaints. He maintained that managers had not been aware of the seriousness of the situation and insisted that the company would take appropriate action.

An independent organisation has been asked to examine the situation. It is expected to interview employees and managers. The organisation has urged everyone involved to cooperate fully and has warned employees against making unverified accusations.

The company has acknowledged that mistakes may have been made and has promised to improve its internal procedures.
