CZĘŚĆ H — READING

The company confirmed that a new working system would be introduced the following year. Management explained that the change was necessary because the existing system was becoming increasingly expensive.

The director maintained that the new system would improve efficiency. However, several employees claimed to have received insufficient information about the proposed changes.

The company denied having deliberately withheld information and insisted that all departments had been informed. An independent investigation later revealed that some employees had not received the relevant documents.

The report recommended that the company improve its internal communication. It also suggested that employees be given more opportunities to express their concerns.

It is now widely believed that the company will have to change the way it communicates major decisions.
