CZĘŚĆ G — READING

Przeczytaj tekst:

When Daniel started his first job, he could speak English reasonably well, but he couldn't communicate confidently in meetings. His manager told him that he should practise speaking more and that he might need to attend an additional course. Daniel had to work long hours, so he didn't have much free time. However, he knew he had to improve if he wanted to get promoted.

A year later, Daniel was able to communicate much more confidently. His colleagues thought he must have spent a lot of time practising. In fact, he had studied regularly in the evenings. Looking back, he believes he could have improved even faster. He says he shouldn't have been so worried about making mistakes.

His company has recently introduced a new training programme. Employees don't have to attend, but Daniel thinks they should. The programme may have been introduced because several employees have experienced communication problems. Daniel says that managers needn't have waited so long to introduce it.
