READING B1

Can personality change?

Many people believe that personality never changes. However, our experiences can influence the way we behave and think.

For example, a shy teenager may become more confident after making new friends or taking part in activities outside their comfort zone. Similarly, someone who has experienced failure may become more determined.

Relationships can also influence personality. Spending time with supportive people can help us become more confident, while difficult relationships may make us more careful.

This does not mean that people completely change their personalities. Some basic characteristics may remain the same. However, most people can develop new skills and ways of dealing with problems.

Questions

1. Why can personality change?
 2. How can new friends influence someone?
 3. How can failure affect a person?
 4. How can relationships influence personality?
 5. Do people completely change their personalities?
 6. What can people develop?

LISTENING B1

Posłuchaj nagrania.

When I was younger, I was quite shy. I didn't like speaking in front of other people. Then I joined a theatre group at school. At first it was difficult, but after a few months I became much more confident. I also met many new people. Today I'm still a relatively quiet person, but I don't have problems speaking to groups anymore.

Questions

1. What was the speaker like when younger?
 2. What did they join?
 3. Why was it difficult at first?
 4. What changed?
 5. What is the speaker like now?
