READING B2

Who are we?

Identity is not simply a collection of personal characteristics. It is also connected with the groups we belong to and the values we share.

Family, culture, education and friendships can all influence the way people see themselves. At the same time, individuals are not completely controlled by their background. People can question the values they were taught and develop their own opinions.

Social media has made identity even more complicated. People can carefully select the image they present to others. As a result, their online identity may be very different from their everyday personality.

Another important factor is social pressure. Young people in particular may feel that they need to behave in a certain way to be accepted by their peers.

Developing a strong sense of identity therefore involves understanding both the influence of other people and the importance of making independent choices.

Questions

1. What can influence identity?
 2. Are people completely controlled by their background?
 3. How can social media affect identity?
 4. Why can young people experience social pressure?
 5. What is necessary for developing a strong sense of identity?

LISTENING B2

Posłuchaj nagrania.

First impressions can be surprisingly powerful. When we meet someone for the first time, we often make assumptions based on their appearance, voice or behaviour. These assumptions are not always correct. Someone who appears unfriendly may simply be nervous, while a very confident person may not necessarily be more capable. This is why it is important to give people time before forming strong opinions about them.

Questions

1. Why are first impressions powerful?
 2. What can influence our first impression?
 3. Are first impressions always correct?
 4. Give the two examples mentioned.
 5. Why should we give people time?
