READING B1

When friendships change

Friendships often change as people get older. When we are children, we usually make friends at school or in our neighbourhood. As teenagers, we may develop friendships based on shared interests, personality or values.

Sometimes friends become less close because their lives change. One person may move to another city, start a new school or develop different interests.

This does not always mean that the friendship has failed. Some friendships simply become less frequent. Other relationships become stronger because people learn how to communicate and support each other.

The most important thing is that both people respect each other's needs and are willing to talk when problems appear.

Questions

1. Why do friendships change?
  2. Where do children usually make friends?
  3. What can happen when people get older?
  4. Does a less frequent friendship necessarily fail?
  5. What makes relationships stronger?
  6. What should people do when problems appear?

LISTENING B1

Posłuchaj nagrania.

I had a disagreement with my best friend last month. We both wanted to organise a weekend trip, but we had different ideas. At first, we were both annoyed and didn't want to listen to each other. Later, we realised that the problem wasn't really important. We talked about it and reached a compromise. In the end, we decided to combine both ideas.

Questions

1. What was the disagreement about?
2. How did they feel initially?

3. What did they realise?
  4. How did they solve the problem?
  5. What was the final solution?
